Live Broadcast: Monday, February 14

Sometimes it is difficult to understand how Parkinson's disease (PD) research that is being done now in a lab will benefit people with PD in "real life". In this special episode of Dr. Gilbert Hosts, we will speak to APDA-funded researchers about their current research projects along with doctors who are treating patients to discuss the potential these research projects have to dramatically improve the lives of those living with PD.

If you're wondering:

Will research being done today help me in the near future?

Why does it take so long for new treatments to be approved?

What are the steps that it takes for a research idea to become a new treatment?

While I do not have the information for the third Thursday webinar in February here is a link to their webinar page. <https://www.michaeljfox.org/webinars>

They also have a long list of past webinars that you can watch.
